Hello

Snakes! Tornadoes! AAAAAH!

Sometimes it's boring to hang out on a movie set, because there's more waiting around than action! But when Robyn Ewing, D.A.'s art director, and Amy Mullins, D.A.'s senior designer, flew down to Huntsville, Alabama, for a photo shoot with Jonathan Taylor Thomas on the set of his upcoming movie Tom Sawyer, they got a big dose of excitement. They survived copperhead snakes (the film set, deep in the woods, was writhing with them!), a real haunted house (where some of the scenes were filmed) and a bunch of tornadoes that blew through northern

Alabama just

when it was time to do our cover shoot!

That's Robyn and Amy sitting in a cotton field, watching the sky grow darker and darker and waiting for the storm to hit. It was all over in a few minutes, but our cover shoot was delayed until the next day. They finally got the shot, in a hectic 17 minutes, moments before their plane took off for New York City!

Whew! After all that excitement, Robyn and Amy aren't leaving the office for a while, so we'll rely on you guys to Boredom was not tolerated this past heat wave, 'cause D.A.'s Summer Fun 101 (July 1995) kept readers totally cool and busy! Here's what some of you did:

Coincidental Clubhouse

We built a clubhouse in my backyard. The next day, I got my July issue of D.A. I read the 101 ways to spend the summer. One of them said to build a tree fort or backyard fort. Weird!

Get in Sync

In your July 1995 issue you mentioned that lip-synching was one of the 101 fun things to do in the summer. Well, it is really fun! Three girls in my class started something called "Lip Service." Whoever wanted to be in on it had to be on a team of two or more people. Our group "sang" and danced to "Creep" by TLC, and Green Day songs. Unfortunately, the girl who was supposed to lip-synch to Green Day didn't know the words, but we got third prize!!

Summer By Numbers

I was reading the summer ideas, and I picked #15, #39 and #99:

1. I am writing a letter to D.A.
2. I learned the words to a song (but I really didn't like the song), and I sang it to five people.
3. I had a cartoon video festival: I got three friends, a lot of food and 20 cartoon tapes. We watched for 14 hours with a five-second break every two hours.

Timely Stuff

IMy friends and I are having sooo much fun with the Summer Fun 101 things! My favorite so far is the time capsule. It was sooo full of stuff. It was too big to bury, so we had to stuff it deep under my deck. Wait—I'm writing to D.A.—I guess I get to check another one off the list!

Who said homework doesn't pay? One school assignment made Mike Kershen, 13, one of the youngest book authors ever. It started almost three years ago, when Mike's third-grade class in Oklahoma had to write about American Indian tribes. "Buffalo was the Comanche's source of food," Mike says. "I wondered what would happen if that was taken away."

Mike's yarn tells the story of White Wolf, a brave who offers to give up the things that are most precious to him to save his starving tribe. "I made up the name White Wolf," Mike says. "I found out later that it's the name of a famous Comanche chief."

Mike's dad sent the story to publishers all over the country; one company said yes. The publishers called the illustrated book Why Buffalo Roam.

This month DAB is twice as cool because we've got not one but two cool kids!

Mike had it easy. He only had to make stuff up. Latoya Hunter, 17, who published a book about her first year of junior high in New York City, had to spill the beans on her family and friends.

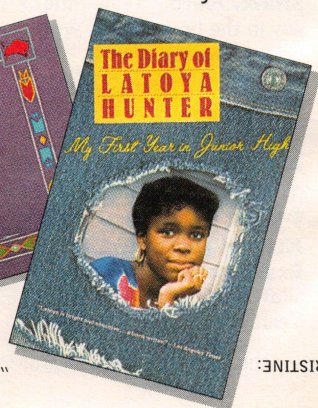

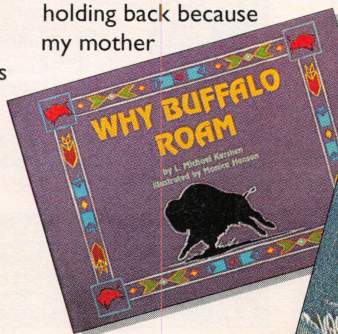

"I was nervous because everyone I knew would read about themselves," Latoya says. "I was holding back because my mother was sneaking peeks. She finally agreed to wait till the book came out."

Latoya gave the lowdown on her friends, and wrote about what happened to her each day. "I can see into the deranged minds of the eighth and ninth graders," she wrote of her dread of Freshman Day at school. "I've heard rumors that they attack kids in the hall."

When her book, The Diary of Latoya Hunter, came out, Latoya toured the country. She was scared—not about the tour, about what she had written. "One friend was offended by what I wrote. But mostly I was relieved at how people handled it," Latoya says. "Most important, I didn't get in trouble with my mother."

Faster than a speeding bullet. More powerful than a locomotive. Able to make you rich in a second. It's Superman! Yes, if you happened to be the lucky owner of Action Comics #1, you'd be $137,500 richer now! That's how much the 1938 comic—which featured the first appearance of the Man of Steel—sold for this year. About 75 copies are thought to exist, with only a handful in mint condition. So the next time your mom threatens to throw out your comics 'cause they're junk, show her this article.

BOOKS

If you've seen Babe the movie, you might want to check out the book on which it was based—Babe: the Gallant Pig. If you missed the flick, here's the plot:

An orphan pig takes up, um, sheepherding, as a career!

Dick King-Smith, the guy who wrote Babe: the Gallant Pig, is a pig fanatic.

Hairdo-or Don't?

and his hair was longer and... magenta?!? Guess blonds don't have more fun. New York City salons say magenta is the current color choice for teen boys. D.A. says: Don't try this at home!

Oh, nooooo! D.A. spotted Macaulay Culkin in L.A. a while ago. Boy, did he look different—cuter, taller, older, After Babe, he wrote a book called (we are not making this up) All Pigs Are Beautiful. And he's even written a book titled I Love Guinea Pigs.

King-Smith's latest, Three Terrible Trins, would also make a good movie. It's the tale of three gray mice—trins is another word for triplets—who are raised to terrify cats and avenge their father's death. They are sassy and could teach you a new slang phrase or two. And D.A. just has to wonder: How long till King-Smith writes I Simply Adore Nasty Sharp-Toothed Rats?

The Big Green. Eleven kids from a loser town get a chance at stardom

The Big Green: a lean, mean soccer machine.

when a new teacher convinces them to start a soccer team. Steve Guttenberg stars as the coach, and Olivia D'Abo is the teacher. (Hmm, wonder if a Disney pro soccer team is in the works?)

The Angus Gang

Is school about being cool or being you?

Angus, a flick due out in late September, proves that even studly jocks and popular cheerleaders have problems. The movie stars newcomer Charlie Talbert, Chris Owen (Major Payne) and Ariana Richards (Jurassic Park). D.A. hung out with them in a New York City hotel.

First we chatted with Charlie, who plays Angus. He was discovered by the movie's director while goofing around in a Wendy's restaurant near Chicago, Illinois.

D.A.: So the director really asked you to try out for a movie?

C.T.: I said to him, "What are you, weird or something?" The next day, I took two large people with me [for protection] to Planet Hollywood. It turned out to be a real audition, so they went home.

D.A.: What's your favorite movie?

C.T.: I like action. I like Batman. If there's anything to know about Batman, I know it. Even the original series, the comic book, the 1939 show—I know it. I am a Batman freak!

D.A.: What do you do in your spare time?

C.T.: One thing I do is listen to old music and pretend I'm a radio station—50s-style. [He deepens his voice.] "It's WKRP Kenosha, and here we are with the Top 10 from..."

Then Chris, who plays Troy, Angus' best friend, stopped by to gab. Chris and Charlie hit it off so well offscreen that Charlie stayed with Chris in California for three weeks!

D.A.: So you and Charlie really got along well?

C.O.: That's what they say actually helped me get the part. Even though Charlie and I had just met each other, when the director saw us working together, it seemed like we'd known each other forever.

D.A.: Did anything funny happen while filming?

C.O.: Well, in one really serious scene with George C. Scott, Charlie was pacing back and forth, and talking. All of a sudden, Charlie's pants fall down around his ankles! He's busting up as he's saying lines. Scott can't see him, because Charlie's behind him.

An astounding announcement amazes Angus (played by Charlie Talbert).

Scott was getting so mad, he was like, "Why are you laughing?!"

D.A.: What kind of fun did you guys have in your spare time?

C.O.: We went to a Green Day concert and went backstage—all access!

Ariana plays Melissa, the beautiful cheerleader and secret love of Angus' life. She told D.A. she's getting ready to work on a sequel to Jurassic Park.

D.A.: Are you like your character?

A.R.: There are mostly ways that I'm different. My character has many inner conflicts and she can't express herself. But she is caring, which I can relate to. It was really nice not to be covered in mud for this part [like in Jurassic Park].

D.A.: We hear you're a singing sensation in Japan.

A.R.: I don't know if I'd call myself that, but I have a CD there. It's specifically for Japan, and I'm doing another one.

D.A.: Would you rather sing or act?

A.R.: I'd rather act. But I sing all the time. My sister and I made this rule that we'd take turns singing at home, because we sing constantly.

—Michelle Ernst

D.A. loves you,

our wonderful readers. How much? We'll tell you. After receiving hundreds of letters, phone calls, faxes, bribes and E-mail messages asking, begging, pleading and whining for yet another article on Jonathan Taylor Thomas, we said, "OK, enough already!" So we hopped on a plane, flew 2,000 miles and landed in Huntsville, Alabama.

JTT as Tom Sawyer

There we found Jonathan making his second live-action movie, starring as Tom in Tom Sawyer, due out at Christmas.

While trying to get an interview with JTT, we sweated in 90-degree weather. When the location scouts unearthed a pit full of copperhead snakes, we ran away screaming. We flung ourselves in a ditch when a tornado furiously funneled our way. We soaked ourselves in insect repellent to keep away the huge bugs. And we were there for just two days—

Jonathan endured those conditions for more than two months!

One day, after working for seven hours, JTT invited D.A. into his air-conditioned trailer to tell some stories and clear up a few rumors.

Jonathan the Rumor Controller

As soon as we sat down with Jonathan, we told him that we had two important questions that his thousands of fans ask us about constantly. Funnily enough, Jonathan knew what the first question was.

D.A.: Jonathan, our readers are dying to know...

J.T.T.: Do I have a girlfriend? No, I do not have a girlfriend.

D.A.: OK. Now, do you go on America Online?

J.T.T.: No, I do not. There are lots of people who pretend to be me. I don't use it. I don't have any on-line service. I repeat, no on-line service.

Jonathan the Adventurer

Making a movie is an adventure in itself, but when Mother Nature gets involved, watch out! Jonathan, always a good sport, just keeps a poz attitude.

D.A.: What did you think of the tornado?

J.T.T.: The tornado was quite scary. We were in the middle of doing a scene, and all of a sudden a production assistant came over and said, "OK, we have to get out of here right now!" I didn't know what in the heck was going on. A minute later, I found out there was a tornado in the area and it started to storm and hail. I'd never been in a tornado before, never! Oh, they are scary. Not something I'd want to go through every day.

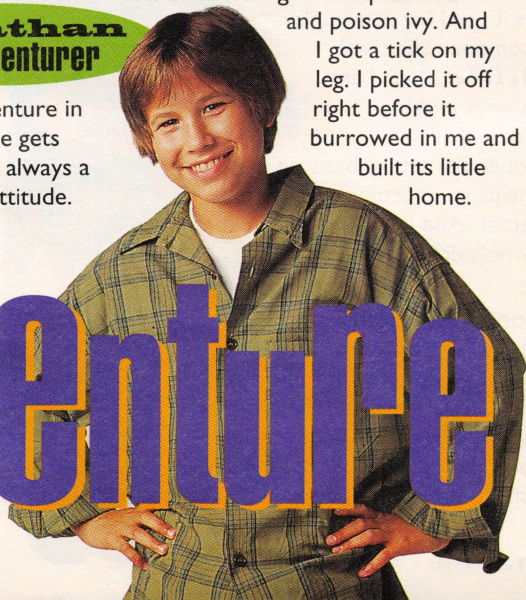

D.A.: What did you do?

J.T.T.: I jumped in a car. The driver and I stayed in there for a little while to see if the tornado would pass. But it was definitely coming our way, so we said, "OK, we gotta get outta here!" and we drove back to the hotel.

D.A.: Are all these big insects buggin' you?

J.T.T.: Oh, yeah, I've been bitten lots of times. I got mosquito bites and poison ivy. And I got a tick on my leg. I picked it off right before it burrowed in me and built its little home.

Adventure

D.A. watched as Jonathan filmed a scene in which he chased a little boy right toward the camera and then off camera. Each time, after Jonathan was safely off camera, he would joke around in a different way. Once, he ran smack into the assistant director. Another time, he fell to the ground as if exhausted. But when the camera is on, and the director yells "Action!" JTT is all pro.

D.A.: Did you do research for the role of Tom Sawyer?

J.T.T.: I went to Mark Twain's house in Hartford, Connecticut, and I read the book Tom Sawyer. It was a novel written by Twain, and that's why we're doing the film—it's got fabulous characters and settings, and it's a great story of life in 1845.

D.A.: Tom is almost the exact opposite of you: He's mischievous, he disobeys his aunt all the time, and he's always getting into trouble. Is it hard for you to play someone like that?

J.T.T.: Well, I am always looking for a challenge when I'm acting, because that helps you become a better actor. And I like playing someone who's different from me.

D.A.: You had to cut your hair for the part, right?

J.T.T.: Yeah, it was real long. I was growing it for Tom Sawyer. Then I got here and the director said, "Oh, no, we want it short." So they cut it all off! But I like it shorter. It's a lot better in this heat.

While D.A. interviewed Jonathan, the lights in the trailer suddenly flashed on and off. "Tornado!

Tornado!"

Jonathan yelled. D.A.

jumped sky-

high! Jonathan burst into laughter. Ha, ha, very funny. Just for that, we made him answer more questions.

D.A.: Did you do any stunts in the movie?

J.T.T.: I have no stunts. I'm kidding. I got to fall off a bridge! I fell about three or four feet backwards into cardboard boxes.

D.A.: Did you like doing that?

J.T.T.: No. [Laughing] Yes, I did. I had a good time. Also, I got to float in a river that was freezing cold. I had a wet suit on under my clothes. But it covered only the lower part of my body; I couldn't wear the top part because it made me look like Ah-nold. [Does Arnold Schwarzenegger voice] You know, I looked real biiiiig.

As Jonathan and D.A. stepped out of his trailer to say goodbye, something rustled in the grass. "A snake! A snake!" Jonathan shouted as he headed for his transport van. D.A. leaped in the air and ran to our car. We could hear Jonathan in the distance laughing, pleased that he'd fooled us once again.

What Does Your Handwriting Say About You?

BY SHEILA DE LA ROSA

Does your homework assignment or the thank-you note you send your aunt reveal what you're really like as a person? That's what clients of Andrea McNichol ask when they hand over samples of handwriting for her to study. McNichol is a graphologist, someone who can look at a person's handwriting, drawings, and doodles and figure out the writer's personality as well as his mental, emotional and physical state.

McNichol's first inkling that there is a connection between handwriting and personality hit her when she was in grade school. "When I was 11, I got good grades in everything but handwriting," she remembers. "In trying to improve my handwriting, I noticed that when I felt better, my handwriting was better. Then I noticed that the loud people I knew had big, loud handwriting and the shy people had little, tiny handwriting."

What's in a name?
Handwriting analyst
Andrea McNichol knows.

These days McNichol has her own graphology business; clients ranging from business owners to the police ask her to report on what people's handwriting reveals about them. And, as always, she continues to add to her handwriting sample collection. "I've been collecting handwriting samples for 40 years," she says. "I always carry 8 1/2" x 11" unlined paper and a pen with me so I can ask people for handwriting samples. Nobody has ever turned me down."

McNichol says it takes about five years to learn graphology. If you want to try your hand at handwriting analysis, here's what she suggests you look for:

The slant. "If the handwriting leans to the right, the person is emotionally expressive. If it goes to the left, then he's emotionally cold. If some words lean to the left and some lean to the right, you're looking at the handwriting of an emotionally unstable person who's going to be difficult to get along with."

The size of the handwriting. "Generally, the bigger the writing, the more outgoing the person. The smaller the writing, the more introverted the person."

Neatness level. "The neater the writing, the neater the person. If the handwriting is sloppy, then the person's usually sloppy."

The margins. "The writing should be lined up next to an imaginary left-hand margin. If it's not, the writer doesn't toe the line of society."

The details. "Do all the i's have dots? Are all the t's crossed? People who are very detail-minded in life tend to be very detail-minded in their handwriting."

The fine print. "If someone prints when there is nothing wrong with his handwriting, then he doesn't want to show his real personality to other people."

"Murderer," She Wrote

Call her a graphology gumshoe. Andrea McNichol often helps the police solve crimes by analyzing notes that criminals have written.

She's found a few traits that usually surface in the writings of people behind bars. Watch your back if you get a letter from someone who:

- slants letters in all directions.
- writes big letters next to small letters.
- doesn't leave margins—especially on the left side of the paper.
- uses a lot of slashing strokes.
- makes up strange letter shapes.

Handwriting

We asked graphology expert Andrea McNichol to analyze the "Home Improvement" kids' handwriting. Here's her report.

Jonathan Taylor Thomas

Jonathan Taylor Thomas is an intelligent, step-by-step thinker who likes to plan things in advance. This is shown by his highly connected handwriting. However, once Jonathan gets going, he doesn't like to stop. His writing is fast and doesn't have frills and loops, which slow the writer down.

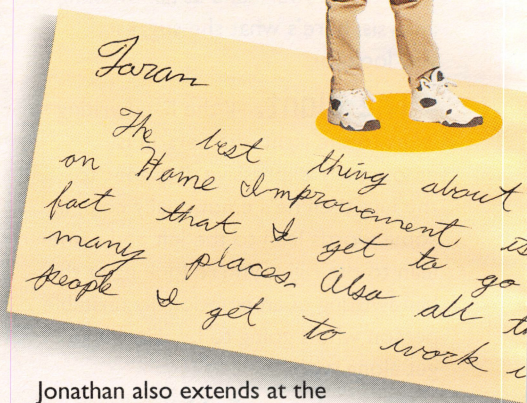

The distance a person leaves between each word represents the distance he wishes to leave between himself and other people. When the words are close together, as Jonathan's are, it means that you like to be near other people.

Jonathan also extends at the ends of words, showing that he reaches a hand out to others.

The tremendous horizontal movement, especially in his signature on the T bars, shows that Jonathan has tremendous work drive and is extremely ambitious. He wants to stand out in the crowd, but his signature doesn't scream for attention.

The best thing about being on "Home Improvement" is gaining experience and knowledge from the talented cast and crew.

Jonathan Taylor Thomas

Improvement

Taran Noah Smith

Taran's writing is very rounded and reaches way out in the ending strokes. This is a genuinely sweet, nice individual. He's friendly and generous with his time and energy.

His writing is loose—quite the opposite of Jonathan's. Loose writing is associated with a person who is open and relaxed and doesn't take things too seriously.

Taran has small, angular personal pronoun I's, which indicate that he is not egotistical. His signature is simple, unadorned and straightforward. This shows that he doesn't put on airs.

There are some spiked p's, which suggest that Taran can be argumentative, but he wants so much to please people that his argumentative tendencies will soon be muted by his desire to be liked.

Zachery Ty Bryan

Zachery's writing is large and clear, which means that he's fond of communicating with others and can make himself easy to understand.

Our signatures represent our public self-image, while the rest of our handwriting represents our real, or private, self-image. Zachery's large signature and his huge personal pronoun I's indicate that he has a great deal of self-confidence.

Zachery is intense, as is shown by the heavy writing pressure and the precision of the strokes. The writing is also angular in places, which, along with the long, strong t bars, indicate that Zach is highly competitive, hard-working and serious.

Tick Talk

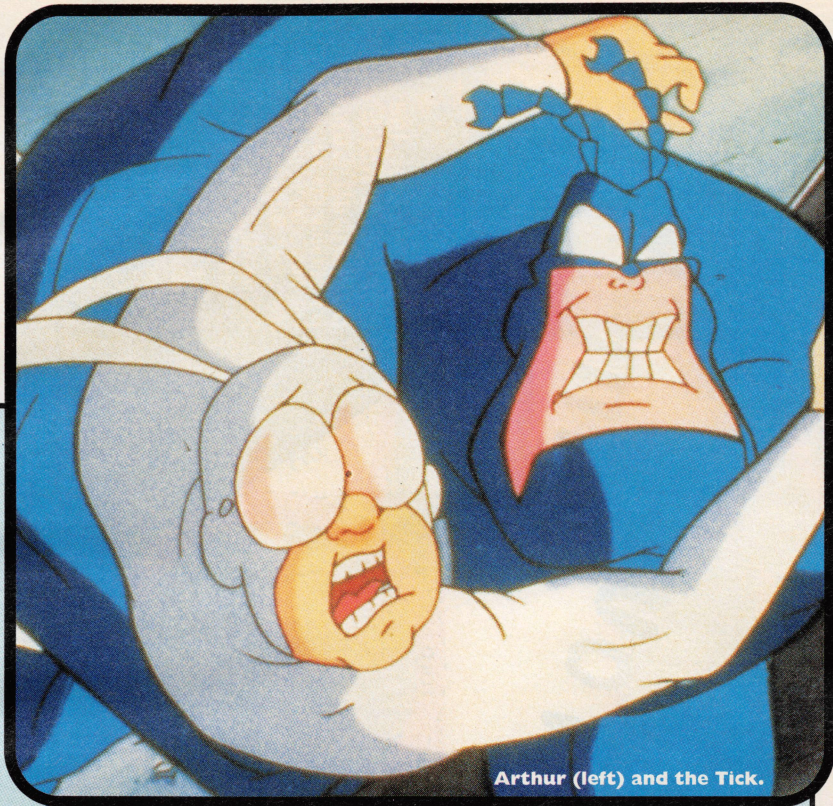

D.A. chats with the creator of "The Tick."

BY HEIDI MACDONALD

When the City is menaced by a giant dinosaur with a mustache, only one superhero can answer the call: The Tick! Along with his accountant sidekick, Arthur, the Tick has got to be the strangest superhero on Saturday-morning TV. We chatted with cartoonist Ben Edlund, who came up with the Tick character when he was just 17 years old.

D.A.: So just what makes the Tick tick?

B.E.: He's an extension of my personality. Not so much the stupidity, although I'm sure I have my moments, but his buoyant good-nature. The Tick is a real good guy, sort of innocent and simple. The name comes from a nickname I had for one of my high school classmates. I called him the Tick as an insult during a football game. It just stuck for a while, and then I started drawing a character called the Tick.

D.A.: So what's coming up in the second season?

B.E.: American Maid shows up more. She's the only competent character running around the show. The villains Chairface Chippendale, Pineapple Pokopo and the Evil Midnight Bomber What Bombs at Midnight all come back. A giant fiend who devours planets shows up, and the Tick has to live on him for a while. The Tick's and Arthur's arms fall off—very cleanly, no bloodshed, no dismay—except for the fact that their arms get stolen.

D.A.: Any changes in their personal lives?

B.E.: Arthur meets a girl, but he doesn't know how to follow up on it. And there are many more trials and tribulations in the Tick and Arthur's relationship. The second season will be a little crazier, which is good. I think by the third season we'll be insane!

ADVENTURE

Climbs a Volcano

BY SEAN PLOTTNER

My Mission:

Find the world's highest active volcano. Then climb it.

The first part was easy. Mauna Loa, rising 13,677 feet up from the island of Hawaii, fit the bill. The climb was another story.

It meant trekking with a heavy backpack for 30 miles, mostly alone and uphill over hardened, jagged lava that's as sharp as broken glass. As for life's finer things, well, like most volcanoes, Mauna Loa has no showers or TV available.

Oh, and one more thing—this mountain of fire could blow sky-high at any minute. It erupts about once every four and a half years, but I set out almost 11 years to the day after the last explosion. Talk about overdue.

But Mr. Adventure wouldn't want it any other way.

DAY ONE

DISTANCE WALKED: Seven and a half miles

TIME OF TRAVEL: Four hours

HIGHEST ALTITUDE: 10,040 feet

I stretched my legs, slipped into my pack and was off. My first footsteps on this volcano took me through a forest before I emerged onto a rocky slope. Psyched, I quickly climbed above the altitude where trees and green plants thrive. It would be three days before I'd see another tree. Until then, my whole world was a lava landscape.

Today, I was headed for a cabin midway up the volcano, where I planned to spend the night. After the five-mile point, some soupy, volcanic fog called vog started chasing me. The last thing I needed was some of Mauna Loa's famous wild weather. Anything can happen up there: Snow can bury the trail, winds can blow up to 70 miles per hour, and vog can wipe out visibility in seconds.

Hoping to beat it to the cabin, I moved faster. But I had several more miles of nasty lava flows to cross. The aa (pronounced ah-ah)—a sharp form of dried lava rock that loosens and clinks underfoot—was perfect for twisting an ankle.

Before I got too frustrated with all the aa, I arrived at the deserted cabin. Cool! It was nestled inside a splatter cone, an old eruption site that looked like a minivolcano. The reddish-brown dirt made it look like Mars.

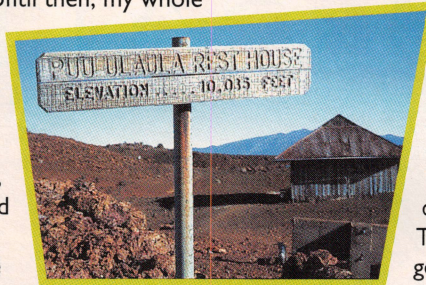

I collected water from a big tank next to the cabin and cooked some soup. Fortunately, I felt no altitude sickness. Up where there's less oxygen, many people suffer intense headaches, dizziness and nausea. The only cure is to get back down.

Feeling lucky about my day, I thanked Pele, the Hawaiian volcano goddess. According to legend, she rules this mountain, so I wanted to stay on her good side.

In the evening, I climbed nearby Red Hill and checked out the prehistoric scene. Splatter cones and craters dotted Mauna Loa's slopes, and I wouldn't have been surprised to see a dinosaur lumber by. Darkness fell and a superbright moon rose. It doesn't get any better than this, I thought, heading inside to drift asleep.

Rivers of lava (right) form during eruptions. These eventually cool and harden into rock. The dried lava flows I crossed were many different colors—red, black, gold, even green. A sign of relief: the first cabin (above).

Did You Forget Anything?

Here's what I took up the volcano in my backpack. Altogether, this stuff weighed about 45 pounds:

Lava Landscape

Backcountry permit (climbing without one is illegal) • Three quarts of water (to refill at cabins) • Headlamp

DAY TWO

DISTANCE WALKED: 11 1/2 miles

TIME OF TRAVEL: Six and a half hours

HIGHEST ALTITUDE: 13,250 feet

This was one tough day on the ultimate StairMaster. Almost every step was tricky as I picked my way over tons of aa. It was killing my feet and boots.

I awoke early and headed for another cabin near the top of Mauna Loa. After several hours, my hands became grossly swollen, probably from the altitude. But my head remained clear. The heights also made me lose my appetite, but around noon I stopped to eat anyway.

When I started hiking again, I found it harder and harder to find the piles of stone that mark the trail. Called ahu (ah-hoo), they're placed about 100 yards apart. Before passing each ahu, I had to locate the next one so that I knew where to go. The ahu blended in with the lava background, so they were easy to lose.

Trudging up slope after slope, I wondered if I'd ever see the top of this volcano. I was dying to get up there and look down into the deep caldera with the funny name: Mokuaweoweo. A caldera is the gigantic crater formed when a volcano's main cone collapses. Mokuaweoweo is 600 feet deep and about nine miles around!

I was almost there. I walked down and across a deep crater floor. Thank you, Pele, for the first flat ground I've seen in two days! But then I had to start climbing again—ugh.

Now I was on the rim of Mokuaweoweo, looking into the volcano. I went another slow mile (it felt like 10 miles) and saw another cabin. I tripped several times in my excitement to get to it. Once there, I threw a gooey, melted chocolate bar I had into some snow. Then I used my bandanna to filter some cruddy water from the tank and gulped a giant drink.

With sore feet and rubbery legs, I fell into one of the bunks for the ultimate power-nap.

I awoke completely refreshed. My candy was solid again. Mauna Loa was quiet and still. It was just me up there—and Pele, of course.

Eventually, my photographer friend Brad arrived, via a different, shorter trail. It was good to have a companion.

That night, lava and adventures filled my dreams. I still had plenty of both ahead of me.

I sure didn't want to lose sight of the ahu (below). In 1981, a hiker strayed, and he was never seen again.

A full-page photograph of a hiker with a backpack walking across a dark, rocky, and uneven volcanic landscape. The terrain is covered in dark grey and black rocks, with patches of bright orange-red mineral deposits. The hiker is wearing a white shirt, light-colored shorts, and a blue backpack. The background shows a vast, flat expanse of similar volcanic terrain under a clear sky.

THE Long HAUL

dried meals (enough for three days plus emergency rations) • First-aid kit • Dark sunglasses • Pocketknife •

DAY THREE

DISTANCE WALKED: 11 miles

TIME OF TRAVEL: Six and a half hours

HIGHEST ALTITUDE: 13,679 feet

I awoke to another red dawn on Mars. It had been a cold night, but the sun warmed things up quickly. Brad and I ate oatmeal, signed the hiker's logbook and packed up. We were off to the summit, the highest point on Mauna Loa. Our route would take us all the way around to the other side of the caldera rim.

On the way, we passed a crater that was about 250 feet deep. I yelled into it: "Adventure on!!" I had yelled down other craters, with no luck, but finally, I heard what I wanted: a resounding echo. Brad and I kept yelling until we were gasping and laughing in the thin air.

We came to a cool windbreak called Jaggar's Cave—named after a scientist who slept there while observing eruptions up close in the early 1900s. We hid our heavy packs behind some rocks in the cave, since we knew we'd be back this way, and headed up to the main summit, nearly three miles away.

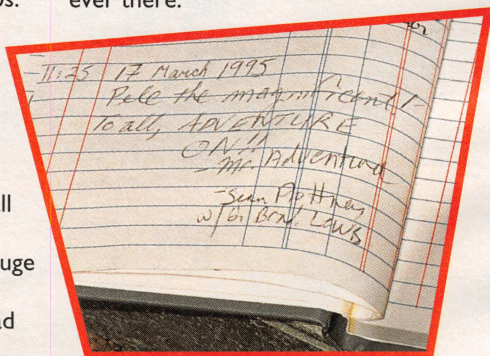

The climb was a piece of cake. It was a major relief to hike without all that pack weight. We followed the caldera rim up until we came to a huge ahu. The trail stopped here, where there was no higher ground. We had reached the summit!

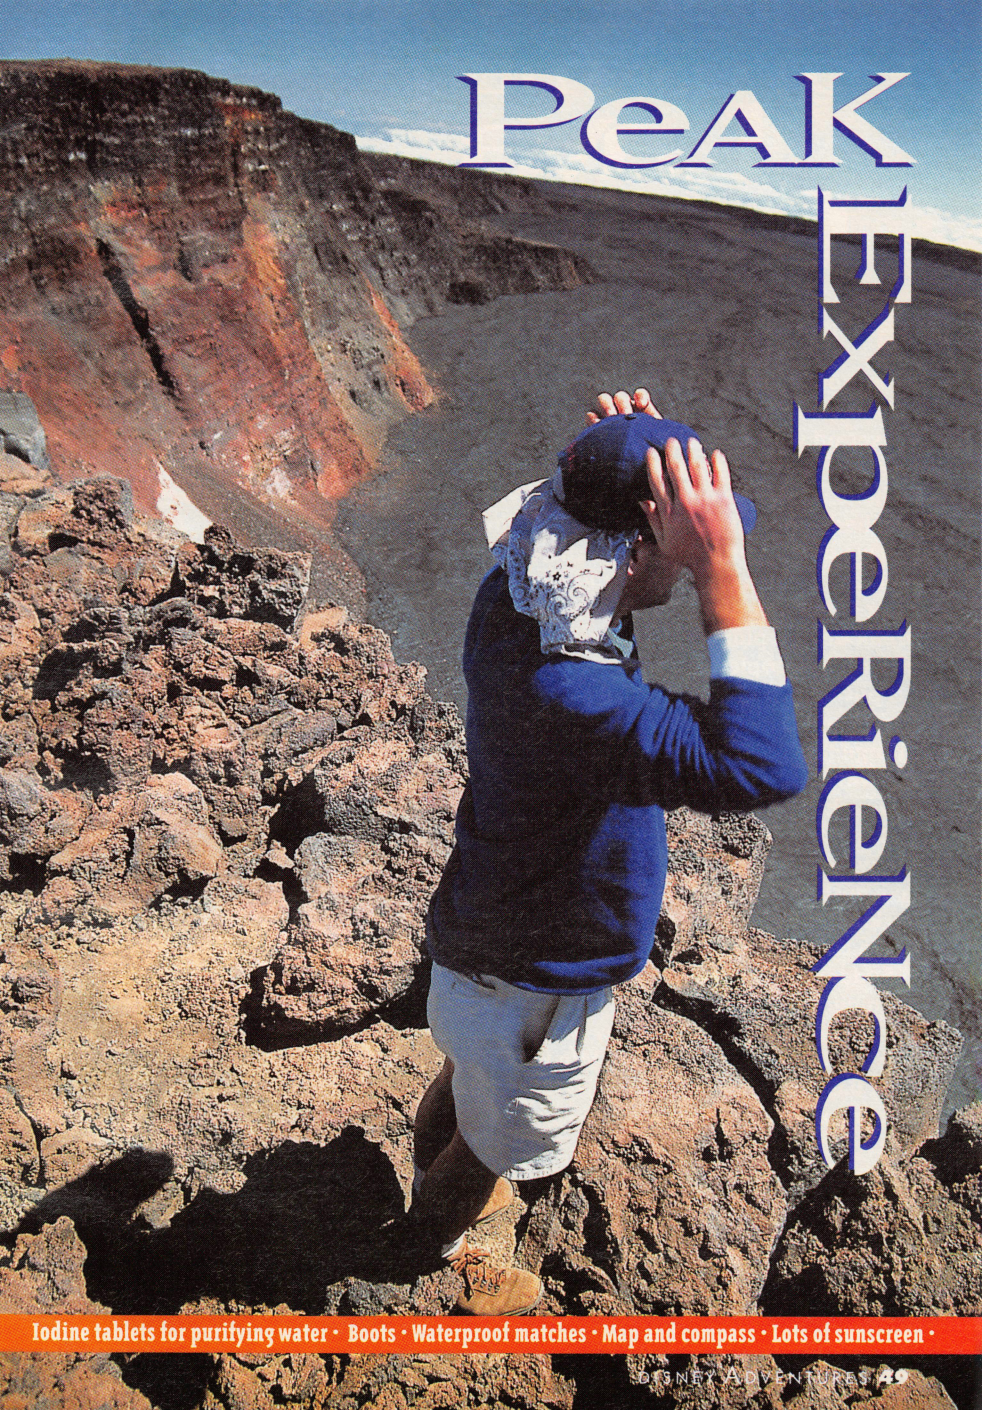

Below and in front of us was Mokuaweoweo. Way across it, we could see the cabin from last night, now a tiny speck. About 20 miles in the opposite direction, we could see Haleakala, a huge volcano on Maui, another Hawaiian island. Lying on my stomach with my head over the edge, I looked straight down 600 feet to the crater floor. It was actually steaming in a few spots!

I was at the top of the world's highest active volcano on a crisp, beautiful day. It was impossible to look in any direction and be bored. Mr. Adventure was extremely happy.

I found a logbook in a metal box buried within the ahu. I wrote some thanks to Pele, and the following: "To all, Adventure on!!" Look for my name if you're ever there.

Three days of hard work above the clouds were paid off with my arrival at the summit cliff (right). There I left a D.A. message (below) for you to find.

DISNEY ADVENTURES 49

HOT ON THE Lava Trail

The coolest thing I did in Hawaii was also the hottest: I went on a dangerous night hike right over scorching lava and watched it pour into the ocean.

I set off with D.A. photographer Brad Lewis, who had a special pass allowing us to head where no one else can go. We reached some lava cliffs at the shoreline, but we didn't get too close to the edge. Hot lava is tricky. You never know when a big old chunk of this lava land might just break off and plop into the ocean, taking us with it. People have died this way.

I put on my respirator to avoid noxious fumes and crouched right next to an oozing orange flow. My neck and face burned as I got within inches of the gooey mess. Yowza—it was the hottest blast I've ever felt.

Brad set up his tripod. I looked toward the water and was mesmerized. Bright lava gushed and hissed into the water. As darkness fell, ribbons of fiery orange crept down the hill behind us.

Suddenly, we smelled something burning. We checked around us, but we seemed safely away from any hot spots.

A light rain started to fall. We hiked back with flashlights as the drops sizzled on the hot ground. Below our feet, the lava glowed like a furnace.

The next day, I discovered what caused that burning smell: The lava had melted my boot soles and a plastic buckle from my pack. We survived, but our gear didn't!

Junior Reporter Lauren Char flew in from her home in Honolulu, Hawaii, to join Mr. Adventure for part of his exploration of Hawaii Volcanoes National Park. Lauren's favorite part? The lava tube. Read on:

Tube Time

BY JUNIOR REPORTER
LAUREN CHAR

Imagine red, fiery lava as hot as 2,100 degrees flowing rapidly underground. When the outer crust of the lava flow hardens and the molten portion drains out, a cave, or a lava tube, is formed. The ancient Hawaiians used these tubes for shelter and as burial sites.

At Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, located on the island of Hawaii, one of the main attractions is the Thurston lava tube, named after the man who found it in 1913.

We walked down an asphalt trail through a tree-fern forest to enter the tube. The huge tree ferns, most of which were taller than I am, grow in the shade of a heavy stand of large ohia trees, all tangled together to form a dense jungle.

The tube itself was dark and roomy. Water dripped through cracks in the ceiling, forming small puddles on the floor. The walls were a reddish-brown color. We looked closely and saw rings in the wall where the lava had been when it started to drain out. As we walked further, we saw roots hanging down from the tube ceiling, where new plants had grown.

When we reached the other side of the cave, Mr. Adventure said, "Cool! Let's go back through the cave again!" We all agreed, and that's what we did.

COOL VOLCANOES

Here's a look at some of the more violent ones:

Mount St. Helens, U.S.A.:

This baby rested for 123 years and then woke up with a bang in May 1980. The eruption shortened Mount St. Helens by 1,300 feet.

Mount Pinatubo, Philippines:

When this volcano erupted in 1991, it was the nastiest explosion on Earth in 60 years. Tons of volcanic ash flew into the atmosphere during the eruption, leading to dark skies and cooler temperatures as far as a thousand miles away.

Galeras, Colombia: As it erupts, Galeras sends about 45 pounds of gold into the rocks around its crater each year. But looking for the treasure can be dangerous—nine people died here in 1993.

Tambora, Indonesia: This is where the deadliest eruption in history took place. When it erupted in 1815, about 92,000 people were killed.

Outer Space: Earth isn't the only place you can find volcanoes. Earlier this year, scientists detected a volcanic eruption on Io, one of the moons of Jupiter. This is the only planet in our solar system other than Earth where an active volcano is known to exist.

SLIME

If you don't like flat tires, maybe you need to be slimed. No kidding! Slime, an unusual flat-tire eliminator, plugs bicycle blowouts as you ride. Just squeeze some fluorescent-green Slime into your deflated inner tubes and pump 'em up. When you meet an unfriendly root or pothole, Slime seeps into the hole and hardens instantly as it hits air. It seals—you wheel. Slime also heals basketball puncture wounds and no-go go-cart tires. For more info, call (805) 489-0490.

Super Bowl Champ on the Run

Say you're superstar NFL quarterback Steve Young, in yet another big game. You take the snap, drop back, and uh-oh, here come three monster defensive linemen, charging at you with one nasty plan: Kill the quarterback!

D.A. wondered what's on Steve's mind at a time like this. So we asked the Super Bowl MVP, and here is his answer:

S.Y.: The only thought is to find the guy who's open. You have to be totally able to block out what's happening around you. You can't be too distracted, or you can't play football.

D.A.:

How did you learn to do that?

S.Y.: By being hit over and over again by those big guys!

THE HOT Wheels

Matt Mantz, 14
Las Vegas, Nevada

Claim to Fame: Professional in-line skater. Finished seventh in 1995 World Championships.

On His Typical Roller Day: "I get up around 7 a.m., lace up my spray-painted skates and go thrashing. I have a 7-foot railing in the backyard. That's perfect for doing stunts."

On Pain: "You have to wear knee pads and wrist guards. Most recently, I jumped on the rail, but lost my balance and fell on my tailbone. I spend a lot of time at the chiropractor having my back and ankles popped."

On Big-Time Competitions: "When you compete, you have to be creative. We do everything from jumps to flips on big ramps, but we only get a 90-second time limit. Then we're graded on our stunts by a panel of judges. There's nothing like nailing a hard stunt on skates. It's a big rush."

On Practice: "To be honest, I don't call it practice. That sounds too much like work. I just go out and skate. I hang loose with my friends, and the tricks just come to me when I'm fooling around."

On Gold Fever: "I think it's a sport growing in popularity around the world. We have synchronized swimming in the Olympics—why not in-line skating? I'd go for the gold."

PROUD WORLDWIDE OLYMPIC SPONSOR

If you want to pitch, you just head to the mound and start throwing some heat, right? Wrong! Colorado Rockies pitcher Bret Saberhagen (formerly of the New York Mets) knows it's not that simple. He throws a variety of pitches, including some that swerve and drop as they head toward the plate—sometimes as fast as 93 miles per hour. The type of pitch depends on how he grips the ball.

Before a recent game, Bret explained:

"My four-

seam fastball

(1) is straight when I throw it. It's my favorite pitch. There's nothing like blowing it by a hitter as he swings and misses.

"I get more movement with my two-seam fastball

(2) than with the four-seam fastball because of the way the air and wind catch the stitching. This pitch will normally go away from a left-handed hitter and into a right-handed hitter. When I'm going to the left side of the plate, I throw a four-seam fastball. If I want the right side of the plate, I throw a two-seam fastball.

"I hold my change-up (3) on the horseshoe of the laces. See? When I throw it, I put pressure on my index finger, and when it comes to the plate, it'll have movement that'll break down and away from a left-handed hitter.

"I hold my slider (4) and curveball (5)

the same way. However, I throw the slider normally, but I throw a curveball out of the side of my hand. And I get a lot more of a break with my curve than I do with my slider.

The curveball is the pitch I have the most difficulty keeping consistent. Some days

I'll have a better slider, and the next day I'll have a better curve."

Talkin' Baseball

Gas, Heat, Smoke, Cheese, Hummer: Pitches that are powerful and mighty fast. "Boy, Saberhagen is really throwing some smoke today."

Card Shark

Finally, the World Series is back! While the two best teams of 1995 battle for the championship, check out Card Shark's Hall of Fame inductees for this season.

Coollest Insert:

The bubble gum in Topps Bazooka Major League Baseball cards. With five cards and a piece of gum in each pack, you can have a major-league bubble-blowing contest while collecting all 132 cards.

Goofiest Appearance by an All-Star:

Ken Griffey, Jr. in Upper Deck's Collector's Choice Special Edition. Keep on trying, Junior—it takes many years of practice to touch your tongue to your nose.

Slick Pick:

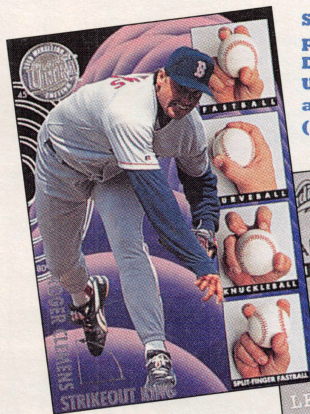

Fleer's Smooth Leather insert set. It features a leatherlike coating, in honor of 10 of the game's slickest defensive players, including Kenny Lofton and Cal Ripken, Jr.

Card With Biggest Charge:

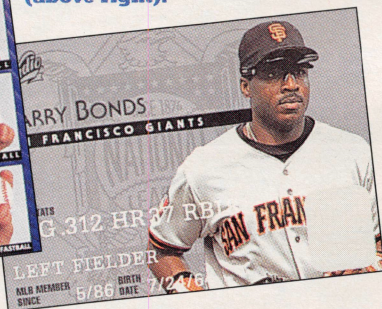

Donruss' Studio set. Each card looks just like a credit card, and has the player's signature on the back.

Most Instructional Card:

The six pitchers on Fleer Ultra's Strikeout Kings insert set. These guys can really throw some smoke, but what makes these cards ultracool is the close-ups of how each hurler grips the ball in order to throw his four best pitches.
